MANAGORE

A rumor has been spreading, throughout the kingdoms of Managore, about a mystic northern people, that live in the distant ice deserts. The common belief is this is nothing more than a myth, used to scare naughty children. The most well-known of these stories is one tells how people would get very distracted in the mid-summer heat and they would often leave their children unattended. In these times it was not uncommon for some youngster to venture into the wilderness and to disappear. Usually any rescue party will find nothing more than a piece of clothing. In places where traces of the missing children were found, the soil was hard as in the harshest winter and all the plants were frozen solid, not melting even after days in the sun. When winter comes the villages from where the children were got attacked and pillaged overnight. In rare cases there would be a survivor speaking of human-like creatures that seemed to be made of ice. These people would be with the missing children, but they were no longer the same. Their eyes were lifeless and crystal as if made of ice, their skin sparkling in the moonlight. It was none other than these children that ravaged the villages, under the watchful eye of the ice-like people.

Soon the land was grasped by terror. The supreme King of the United Kingdoms gathered an army, the likes of which has never been seen, to march to the ice desert to find and destroy the threat of the ice people.

The supreme King and his army never returned… Nobody knows what exactly happened to them, but the ice people disappeared for centuries. The great threat passed, but the kingdoms of Managore were crushed. It took decades for them to recover and they never reunited again.

As the years passed on this story all but fell into oblivion. Each of us, the members of the magicians' high council, has felt a great accumulation of energy somewhere in the north. Energy so primal and brutal that it runs the blood of everyone cold and makes people stay up all night. Clearly, this is a threat that we can't cope with, but his time the kingdoms have an ally who is as powerful as the ice people. It seems, that everything is up to the fire tribes and their domesticated dragons now.
